Multatuli P. V., Zalesski K. A. New approaches to the study of the history of the Russo-Japanese War of 1904–1905

The presentation considers a new approach to the history of the Russo-Japanese war – one of the most mythologised pages of Russian history. Analyses the causes of the conflict, Japan's policy aimed at inciting war, as well as myths about the "unnecessariness" of the war for our Fatherland and about the "terrible defeat" supposedly dealt by the Japanese.

International Policy

Fedortsev V. A. Germany's new foreign policy concept: Origins and prospects

The article considers the causes and origins of the process, which began at the turn of 2013–2014, of reviewing Germany's concept of foreign policy, as well as some discrete aspects of theoretical discussions leading up to that process. Special attention is given to the "transatlantic" version of the development of German foreign policy, focused on the close cooperation of Germany with the United States in the conservation and development of the existing international order.

Mikhailov S. A. The principle of balance in UK foreign policy as exemplified by changing UK approaches to European policy in the security and defence sphere (1998–1999)

The article is devoted to an analysis of British policy in the transatlantic discussions arising in connection with the Anglo-French agreement signed in Saint Malo in December 1998. In substance, the agreement was a declaration of intent to develop European defence integration, largely independent of NATO and the United States. Thus, the document was a "turning point" in the UK's political approach to European defence integration. Special attention is given to an investigation of the reasons for such a turn in foreign policy both in terms of situational factors and a theoretical analysis of the structure of international relations.

Lushnikov O. E. A decade of Central and Eastern European Countries' membership in the European Union: Results and prospects

For new EU Member States, such as the CEE countries, ten years is long enough to sum up intermediate results: membership in the largest European integration association offers great opportunities, but adapting to membership conditions imposes a difficult road. Experience shows that newcomers' expectations were not all justified. Intense competition for markets between the newly acceded EU States and old Member States does not always benefit the former. This complicates the prospects of those countries' trade with Russia.

Keywords: Central and Eastern Europe – adaptation to EU membership – economic modernization and innovation – loss of deepening trade prospects with Russia – disappointment with current model of EU enlargement 150

Karataev S. V. BRICS Rating Agency: Myth or necessity?

Analysis of changes in the rating market following the global financial crisis of 2007 showed that international community efforts to increase transparency, stimulate competition and reduce the risk of conflicts of interest in the agency's activity did not yield meaningful results. This makes it necessary to search for an alternative solution that can be found in the creation of a BRICS credit rating agency. The implementation of this initiative will help countries unite to draw closer to realizing their previously stated goals of reforming the international financial framework.

Religion and Politics

- Nikolai Germansky.* Russia and the fates of the World
 Today's world has reached a point beyond which a chasm of nothingness gapes. The North American civilizational model offers humanity its own godless truth, the meaning of which is a satiated and comfortable life. The Russian model advocates Divine truth, the meaning of which is not earthly pleasure but the bliss of the Gospels. If the Russian world is not to lose in this serious battle it needs to strengthen Orthodoxy as its civilizational core.
